LEHI CITY NO LONGER EXPECTS CULINARY WATER OUTAGES

City Calls on Residents to Continue Conservation Efforts

Lehi, Utah | June 21, 2013 – Thanks to the continued conservation efforts by Lehi’s residents, Lehi City Water Department no longer expects that the City will experience outages of culinary water. On Wednesday, June 19th, city officials informed the public that the City may risk culinary water outages if residents did not refrain from using culinary water for activities such as watering lawns and gardens. Although culinary water is returning to stable levels, city officials are encouraging residents continue to follow city ordinance in refraining from using culinary water for restricted activities.

The City’s pressurized irrigation, or secondary water, levels remain low due to the drought conditions being experienced throughout the state. The water restrictions adopted by Lehi City Council on June 11, 2013 remain in place. The pressurized irrigation restrictions call for odd-numbered homes in Lehi to water lawns and gardens on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday only. Even-numbered homes may only water on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Sunday is for spot watering only. All Lehi residents are restricted from watering between the hours of 10:00 am and 6:00 pm. The City is also encouraging residents to vary watering times during authorized hours to allow for best pressurized irrigation results.

Lehi City is deeply appreciative to its residents for helping the City make it through its culinary water emergency.
